

Adventist Chaplaincy Ministries

It is of great importance that the one who is chosen to care for the spiritual interests of patients and helpers be a man of sound judgment and undeviating principle, a man who will have moral influence, who knows how to deal with minds. He should be a person of wisdom and culture, of affection as well as intelligence. He may not be thoroughly efficient in all respects at first; but he should, by earnest thought and the exercise of his abilities, qualify himself for this important work. The greatest wisdom and gentleness are needed to serve in this position acceptably, yet with unbending integrity, for prejudice, bigotry, and error of every form and description must be met.

Definition of an SDA Chaplain

1. Definition of a Seventh-day Adventist Chaplain— A Seventh-day Adventist Chaplain is a duly-licensed/credentialed minister of the Church with ecclesiastical endorsement to serve in a specialized, institutional setting. A chaplain provides pastoral care for persons in need, facilitates ministry by other persons and works with institutional leadership in mission interpretation and policy/program issues pertaining to the mission of the institution.

These are NOT SDA Chaplains! IACLE is not an SDA organization!
If our members train with them and accept their ordination and endorsement
Are they still Adventist?
